

Igor Beylin is a passionate recycling advocate and owner of Scrap Management. Being a student of recycling, he has visited hundreds of recycling facilities worldwide and taught thousands of business owners and residents how to handle scrap plastic. Igor has written articles that were published in Recycling Today and was honored to be a speaker at their event in Chicago 2012. Then he delivered a presentation at the Southern Waste Information Exchange conference in 2013 about diverting, handling and processing MRP (Mixed Rigid Plastic). His goal is to help everyone understand what to recycle and how to do it in order to protect our planet and preserve our environment.

In 2002, Igor Beylin pioneered the idea and developed a process for the recovery of bulky rigid plastics from the curbside waste stream. Pilot programs were set up that, over time grew into a national trend. His company, teaches recycling companies how to deal with plastic waste and brands how to create recyclable packaging. By understanding what end markets require and value in each location, strategies are developed for businesses and communities. Much of their focus is dedicated to municipal solid waste and dealing with curbside plastic scrap. Last year they recycled over 100 Million pounds of plastic, most of which was landfill and ocean bound.

Being a devoted Husband and committed Father to two amazing girls, Penelope (4) and Sophia (7) consumes most time not spent in the world of recycling. Whether it's taking bike rides, walking the dog or doing a yoga class together, being with family is priority on weekends. Once playing games with the kids come to a close, the time to enjoy a historical fiction novel, biography or news magazine arrives. AI & robotics and are exciting fields of interest. Medical research and technology amazes and global economics fascinate. A passion for new experiences leads to extensive travel in the US and Asia.
